A REMARKABLE LAKE.—The Pioche Record of the 17th relates the following story, and we reproduce it for what it is worth:

Some prospectors have arrived here who spent a number of months prospecting the country in the Mogollon mountains, in eastern Arizona and western New Mexico, and they report the discovery of a lake in that region which has an outlet and inlet through one and the same channel; the water is kept in constant circulation, but never leaves the basin, only through evaporation. The outlet is through a canyon at the upper end of the lake, the water, almost on a level with the main body, moving sluggishly away in a circuitous course for several miles, when it returns and is precipitated into the lower end of the lake, over high and perpendicular shore walls. Several streams empty into the lake, which comprises many square miles, but no positive outlet is visible.

NON EST INVENTUS.—Upon the venue for additional jurors in the case of Sullivan, was the name of Marchorie. Sheriff Emery inquired of about a hundred persons, but was unable to ascertain anything in regard to the juror or his whereabouts, until he struck Lewey Lonsdale of the Lafayette Restaurant, who informed him that he would find the person he was searching for in the basement story of a clay tenement in the graveyard at the foot of the grade, he having taken up his residence there about nine months ago. Mr. Emery concluded that the party was out of the jurisdiction of the Court of the Sixth Judicial District, so he returned him non est inventus.—Reese River Re-veille.
